Get the Travel Bug

Everybody should make the time to travel. Before the hectic whirlwind of the real world starts, where you need to work and commit yourself to this work, you should take the opportunity to travel and experience the life outside your world.

Due to my ever-changing decisions about what to study in university, the only thing I was ever sure of was the fact that I wanted to travel. So, I took a gap year, worked my butt off in order to earn money and then embarked on a trip that I can only describe as the greatest experience of my life.

A solo trip sounds daunting and believe me, I was absolutely terrified – to the point where at the airport when saying goodbye to my mother and my step-dad, I was tempted to follow them back to the car and pretend the whole thing had never happened. However, despite the home-sickness at the beginning of the trip, I soon settled into traveller life, meeting amazing people and experiencing things which changed my life.

So, if you want to travel, what should you do?

Firstly, consider the 4 "Ws" – what, when, who and where;

WHAT – what do you want to do, what do you need to do?

WHEN – when do you want to go and for how long?

WHO – who do you want to go with – friends, family, solo?

WHERE – most importantly, where do you want to go? Worldwide, Europe...so many countries, so little time!

Secondly, you should plan where you want to visit. Get a map and start plotting your route! There are a number of fantastic student travel agents such as STA and Around The World Experts which will help you plan and organize your trip, even booking plane tickets, sorting boarding passes and organising day trips and group tours.

Thirdly, you need to work, work, work in order to fund your trip! Whatever the job, whatever the hours, no matter how fed up you get, just remember that after all that hard work, you're going to be having the time of your life in places you've only ever dreamed of going.

And finally, once all your hard work has paid off, head to the airport and off you go!

Happy planning travellers!
